hyperaccessibility of thoughts can lead to systematic biases not only in the quantity of cognitive responding but also in the content of Secondly, and perhaps most importantly, such scares cause customers to question the legitimacy and integrity of the casino. When the gamblers who received the bogus award letters learned that the fraud perpetrators had acquired their names because their entry forms had been discarded, they lost faith in the casino itself. Many decided that they had never actually been entered into the contest and that...

...and shredding entry tickets, could have saved the company significant embarrassment.

FRAUD IN THE FIELD

Casinos often employ a field sales force to persuade both new and established customers to visit their casino. Some sales force members are direct employees of the casino, but most are commissioned agents who are compensated based on the amount of casino play they generate. Often, they also have broad comping authority for their customers.

Again, the level of agent activity and the corresponding incentives make field agent fraud quite common. In one case, a casino executive was extorting payments from commissioned field representatives from South America. The executive opened U...

The databases also have redefined a return visit, Larsen says. incentive marketing for casinos in other ways. No longer do casinos simply slash room rates and throw big parties in an effort to attract business. The casinos now provide incentives according to how much the players are willing to gamble: The more money wagered, the bigger the incentive.

At the Tropicana Resort and Casino in Las Vegas, "Gold Card" members are top-level players who not only get special room rates and discounts on food and beverages, they...

The next generation

As technology continues to progress at a blinding pace (read: Internet), the next phase in this story has already been reached. Some casinos, such as the Mohegan Sun, allow players to redeem points for anything in the casino, including lodging, food, gift shop merchandise and entertainment. This is clearly the direction the industry is heading in, especially...

Beyond the church hall

The fact that bingo is played in sessions that start and stop throughout the day is a key factor in its popularity among casino operators. Bingo players tend to kill time between bingo sessions by playing other casino games, dining at a property's restaurants or purchasing goods in a casino's retail establishments.

Casino Data Systems develops and markets the Oasis II on-line accounting and player tracking information systems to the casino industry. Player tracking allows casinos to compile information on customer preferences, play and casino activity, which allows them to provide incentives to individual players or groups, based on their level, frequency and time of play. The system also allows casinos to develop a database of players to more efficiently market their property. The company's casino accounting systems provide an instant or on-line accounting of revenues and net win to the casinos for all types of slot machines. Her problems started when she clocked out.

Instead of heading to her split-level home in Pacific to sleep, she'd go to another casino to play the slots. Often, she'd stay until afternoon, leaving only when she hit her ATM's $600 withdrawal limit.

A state regulation bars casino employees from gambling in the casino where they work. But all Farr had to do was walk through the pavilion that connects Players to a Harrah's casino.

Facing mounting bills, utility shutoffs and credit-card debt, Farr decided to permanently ban herself from Missouri casinos. On Feb. 14, she signed up for the state's List of Disassociated Persons. That means she could face trespassing charges if she enters any of the state's 10 casinos.

Farr says she paid an unfair price for seeking help: She lost her job.

"I...

Farr could have applied for lower-paying positions in the casino's gift shop or restaurant, but she declined.

Statewide, about 1,400 people have signed up to ban themselves from Missouri casinos. No statistics are available on how many people on the list have worked in the gambling industry. But research shows casino employees are more likely to have serious gambling problems than the general population.

Farr wants the state to change the self-banning program...

FRAUD IN THE FIELD

Casinos often employ a field sales force to persuade both new and established customers to visit their casino. Some sales force members are direct employees of the casino, but most are commissioned agents who are compensated based on the amount of casino play they generate. Often, they also have broad comping authority for their customers.

...rule it out in the future. ``The market is subject to change. ``

Meanwhile all five casinos continue to give away plenty of other cash through their players' clubs.

The memberships, available for the asking, award points to players commensurate with their level of their play at table games, slots and other electronic gambling devices.

At Sam's Town for instance, $1,000 worth of ``coin in'' earns $5 cash back plus $2.50 in ``comps'' - credit toward casino food or gift shop items.

There's a trade-off

In exchange - and most players don't understand this - their gambling is closely tracked by computers that record their betting habits and favorite games. That data...

... majority of [Caribbean] tourists have never made their vacation decision based on the availability of casino gaming," he said.

Andrews said that fewer North Americans would be attracted to the Caribbean...

...at home.

"The way things are heading, no one will have to leave home to bet on his favorite table games or slots," he said.

Moreover, he contended, the once-promising market for island casinos represented by cruise passengers has dried up with the expansion of onboard nightclubs and casinos.

Compared with the number of cruise passengers who once bought nightclub-casino packages in Puerto Rico, he said, "this market from cruise ships is now nonexistent."

However, he added, the region's casinos have a role as part of the incentives package that governments can use to attract new hotel investments.

Viewed as an additional amenity, along with golf, tennis, spas and convention facilities, casinos can add to a resort's recreational offerings, Andrews said, particularly in the after-dinner hours, when gaming is concentrated.

The "relatively modest" level of casino profits in Caribbean casinos, he said, also could help large, new resort hotels carry their debt service.

... A1
is well-known an money-operated maintenance implement, with which the

The invention is the basis the task to arrange and offer thus to the gambler a large maintenance and thus a larger incentive the play with a maintenance implement of the kind initially specified the expiration of the play happening during the risk play more interesting, as additional profit possibilities are put to the gambler at the disposal, which he can affect if necessary.

This task is solved according to invention by the fact

For the gambler here a special incentive is established during the risk play, because a sequence of lit memory lamps is established, on which an attainable profit is dependent. The gambler can observe the structure of the illuminated memory lamp sequence visually at the same time...

play happening is arranged still more varied, since the gambler in the risk play preserves the possibility of the achievement of a bonus in the Jackpot. The tension of the gambler is constantly increased by the events appearing in connection with the risk play, whereby also the incentive is increased to the play. Beyond that a larger

... of the coins falling into the expense bowl depends however not on one in a play installation obtained profit, but only of the level of the mirror cabinet. Such playing equipments have therefore only a small incentive for play for a gambler .

It is task of the available invention to establish an money-operated maintenance implement of the kind initially specified the expiration of play within the profit lottery with larger play and incentive for profit out-arranges, in order to increase the maintenance value for the gambler .

According to invention the task is solved by the fact that the collector is attached...

... apparatus that will track the number of hands of a given card game of a casino .

BACKGROUND OF THE INVENTION

In an analogy to frequent flyer programs that have been introduced by various airline carriers, oftentimes casinos provide frequent player incentives to casino players who play certain games at high betting levels. For example, a player bets at a certain dollar level (perhaps $100). To encourage continued betting at this level , a fraction of a theoretical win or a portion of the amount the person is playing will be applied to other activities within that particular organization.

A casino owner would like to track and manage transactions and player marketing data in a pit area of the casino. If a person plays a certain amount of money on a game like blackjack, there will be discounts provided for the hotel room or there may be a free hotel room.

...area. The cards are typically utilized for tracking of players and their transactions within the casino.

Typically, a system for tracking transactions in a pit area of a casino is a manual paper-based one. In such a system, an employee in a pit area, typically the pit boss, writes down the betting levels called the bet rating of the players. The pit personnel must spend a considerable amount of time recording the transactions for later entry by the pit clerk. The bet rating is defined as the pit boss' best guess as to the player's betting level over time. This double entry results in errors and delays. Additionally, pit personnel spend an...

As much as casinos relish the high rollers, doing business with them can have its pitfalls. When they win, the whales and premium players leave with the casino's money immediately. But when the high-rollers lose, casino operators sometimes have a difficult time collecting the debt. The credit that is extended to...

...as a gentleman's agreement, and bettors who wager millions of dollars can be excessive risk takers who eventually run out of money.

For all that they give to lure high rollers, casino companies can never be sure that their coveted catch will stay in the net. "The...

Nicholas R. Amato, president of the Casino Association of New Jersey, which represents 11 of the city's 12 gambling halls, said his group supports "the purpose and concept" of the bill but believes that incentives to promote economic development should maintain "a level playing field among all casino operations" and that taxpayers, not casino developers, should be the beneficiaries of any tax relief.
Both Mr. Amato and Arthur M. Goldberg, the chairman and chief executive of Bally Entertainment, operator of two Atlantic City casinos, said more developers would have bid for the landfill site had they known their cleanup costs might have been reimbursed. "We...

...such players, along with offering a full array of travel amenities, services and cuisine. However, casinos compete most significantly over internal policies like maximum limits that such top-end players are permitted to wager, credit facilities, advanced deposit requirements, and the handling of cash. Moreover, casinos often provide discounts to these customers by offering rebates on losses and commissions paid on handle (Eadington and Kent-- Lemon, 1992).

At a less glitzy level, discounting also takes place in casinos with slot "clubs" that are linked to player tracking systems. Players accumulate points as a function of handle that they generate at a particular casino, or among all the casinos owned by a specific company. The points are redeemable for prizes; for complementary meals, rooms...

Considerations

The rebate on loss agreement should be conditioned. That is, the player must play "x" number of hands to receive "y" rebate on loss. If the total hands are...

...be decreased. For example, if 2,000 hands were required to receive a 20 percent rebate, the rebate should be decreased to 15 percent if the player quits at 800 hands, 10 percent...
...Although tables for banker and player bettors are provided, it would be more conservative for casino management to assume all bettors will be banker bettors. Therefore, any bets other than banker bets will benefit the casino. In addition, the casino should always round down when determining rebate or estimating the theoretical casino win. If 75 hands were played, the casino should use the 50 hand row, not the 100 hand row.

The tables assume level betting. Any variance in bets hurts the casino. A bettor who wagers flat $500 banker bets for 300 hands will generate $1,590 in theoretical win. If given a 20 percent rebate, this theoretical is reduced to $780 (51 percent reduction).

Abettor who wagers $1 for each...

CASINO WORKER WHO LOST HER JOB OVER GAMBLING ADDICTION WANTS TO CHANGE LAW WOMAN WHO REPAIRED SLOTS PUT HERSELF ON BANNED LIST, FORCING CASINO TO

Her problems started when she clocked out.

Instead of heading to her split-level home in Pacific to sleep, she'd go to another casino to play the slots. Often, she'd stay until afternoon, leaving only when she hit her ATM's $600 withdrawal limit.

A state regulation bars casino employees from gambling in the casino where they work. But all Farr had to do was walk through the pavilion that connects Players to a Harrah's casino.

Facing mounting bills, utility shutoffs and credit-card debt, Farr decided to permanently ban herself from Missouri casinos. On Feb. 14, she signed up for the state's List of Disassociated Persons. That means she could face trespassing charges if she enters any of the state's 10 casinos.

Farr says she paid an unfair price for seeking help: She lost her job.

"I...

Under state regulations, the company had no choice. Since Farr was barred from the casino floor, "the end result was she could no longer work as a slot tech," says...

...assistant vice president for marketing.

Farr could have applied for lower-paying positions in the casino's gift shop or restaurant, but she declined.

Statewide, about 1,400 people have signed up to ban themselves from Missouri casinos. No statistics are available on how many people on the list have worked in the gambling industry. But research shows casino employees are more likely to have serious gambling problems than the general population.

Farr wants the state to change the self-banning program...

GST ON COMMISSION PLAY

NO IMPACT ON CASINO OUTGOINGS

Event

* Inaccurate media reports claim Australian casinos have been given GST exemptions on international play, granting a windfall gain to casinos.

Impact

* The real GST status of international play remains unchanged, with a 10% GST to be levied on international revenues. What has been clarified at the Federal level is that junket operators do not have to levy a 10% GST on the services they provide to Australian casinos.

* Margins on international play at casinos will remain unchanged.

* The exemption simply clarifies the status of junket operators as nonresident service...

...are no earnings
implications for SCY, JUP, BIR and CRO.

Analysis

* Media reports claim that casinos have been granted exemptions over payments to commission operators for sourcing international gamblers to the casinos.

* Contrary to media reports-this does not provide a windfall gain to casinos. If a GST were added to operator commissions, it would be deductible by a casino from the ultimate GST levied on casino revenues, as a rebate of GST paid on the input to the ultimate service provision...

...operators and high rollers.

* This would effectively halve the GST payable on international business at casinos-granting a windfall gain to casinos. This is not the case.

The Real Deal

* The actual proposal seeks to ensure that junket operators-who provide a service to casinos by bringing players to the venue-are exempt from the requirement to register as a...

...have to have a 10% GST applied to it, however would be eligible for a rebate by the casino in calculating the ultimate GST on gambling services provided.

Although total credit play in Atlantic City does not seem to have increased, the way it is used may have changed for at least two reasons. First, there are more casinos competing for high roller play , so high rollers may be moving from casino to casino more often. We expect competition for high rollers to continue to be intense, and as more casinos open, there may be even more moving about. Second, complimentary, including free meals and rooms that are given to premium players, are doled out according to how much a player gambles. One measurement used by the casinos is the amount of credit requested. ...To lure tourists in from the street, the Aladdin has people on the sidewalk distributing coupons to the crowds.

Inside, the casino offers a free dice game where tourists can win prizes ranging from free food to cash.

About 2,000 people a day play the dice game, and more tourists then expected have rolled snake-eyes three times in a row to win the grand prize of getting to play every gambling machine in the casino one time for free, says Guth.

Other mid-level hotels are trying a variety of things to do battle with pirates and the Wizard...

Future casinos may not feature aliens and bizarre blue drinks a la Star Wars, but the Nintendo...

...home in them.

What regulators and industry suppliers alike see as a possibility are cashless casinos.

The idea is to provide gamblers with a card, similar to an automated bank teller...
...games as well as table games.

The cards would replace the tokens now issued by casinos. Gamblers would put cash into a machine, receive the card and then insert the card...

...or bank accounts.

Mikohn Gaming Corp. is developing a system based on this concept called CasinoLink. It enables the casino to see exactly who is playing what game at what rate. The system even matches...

...identify the proper owner of the card if it is stolen.

In the future, the casino could hook everything up to the system so they would know what souvenirs the guest buys from the gift shop, what restaurants they eat at and whether or not they used room service.

But...

...technology will also, to a greater degree than it already has, change the way people play.

One example already used is progressive slots. Because many slots are connected, gamblers have a shot at winning large payouts.

Casino Data System spokesman Mark Lipparelli said the possibilities are much greater. He said progressives could be alienated with tournaments so players who reached a certain level of play would be bumped up into a smaller group. In that group, one person would be...

... Robert Wilkes, of Brown Brothers Harriman Inc., New York, agreed. He also said GTE is gambling on further deregulation of local telephone service and deeper penetration of cellular service.

"I think the merger is a major bet on incentivized regulation and a bet on cellular," Wilkes said. Contel earns a higher rate of return on its telephone operations than does GTE, and there is some risk that regulators will trim the allowable level after the merger. Conversely, if incentive regulation continues to make inroads as it has in recent months, the new GTE could...

... By being able to check Total Rewards points on the website, customers have a new incentive to move from the gold level to the platinum or diamond level. The benefits of moving to the next level will be clear. If they are thinking about making a trip to a casino, we think the value of moving from one level to the next will give them the incentive to head for one of our properties, rather than a competitor. That will increase the handle of the play at our properties. We know that 60% of our current customers use the Internet for purchases and travel plans. We have a good level of comfort that the customers will use our website as a means of increasing their...
